INTRODUCTION:

Learning a foreign language is the most in-demand job today. And foreign languages, as well as learning English, are becoming the need of the hour. A clear example of this is the need to know at least one foreign language in almost every job. We can see that teaching English is popular in schools, high schools, and universities but nowadays parents want their children to start learning English or another foreign language from an early age. So, how can you teach them English quickly and easily from kindergarden age? Many scientists have worked on this and found several methodical ways. Some of them are as follows:

Line up to Enter

Depending on your preschool's drop-off procedures, you can utilize this activity to welcome each child to class each morning. As your class forms a line outside the door, have them come in one at a time . Ask each youngster a question as they come in, or strike up a quick, informal discussion with them. If you do this often, you'll be able to gauge how comfortable your kids are with some of the more basic English conversational skills in addition to providing each one of your pupils with the individualized attention that's so important at that age.

Hello song

Preschools benefit greatly from songs as a way to begin the day. Sing your favourite 'hi' song every day (you may make your own or discover a ton of them on You Tube). Once your kids are familiar with the song, feel free to change up a few little parts of it. You can also incorporate gestures into your song, such as bowing to one another, tipping an imaginary cap, and shaking hands and waving to one another.

Circle time

For classes that arrive more somber, circle time is a fantastic approach to kick off the day. From a circle with the kids, explain the day's major lesson, tell them about a significant person or item, or demonstrate an experiment that they can perform on their own later in the day.

Question Up

Since preschoolers are naturally interested, you might find that the ideal way to begin your lesson is to simply offer an open-ended inquiry period. After giving pupils an opportunity to speak or ask questions, respond to them. Since kids will have had an opportunity to express words that they have been dying to say, this can help to govern other instructional times during the day.
