Abstract: The main aim of the study was focused on the non native English speakers and the difficulties they face while learning English as a second language (ESL) and the part of teachers. This is mainly because teachers and mentors are supposed to know various innovative and instructional approaches to make their lessons meaningful and interesting.

Keywords: English speakers, non-native, Teaching English methodology, Second language.

In this fast growing competitive world English has been spoken by one quarter of world's population. And with this way English is becoming mandatory like a "lingua franca" (a language that is common to learn and speak although it is not native) Most of the students learn English to compete with other students who want to work in white-collar jobs but as a rule, they face with some challenges while learning non-native language. So that they try to find ways and solutions to learn languages in an efficient way, however, most students of different backgrounds commit different types of errors in the learning process such as pronunciation, vocabulary usage, spelling and grammar. They only need reliable and effective methods to learn any languages quickly and fully.

For improving small mistakes in pronunciation or spelling they should just follow these daily rules:

- A daily conversation with native speakers or English speaker friends
- Watching English movies or videos with analysis
- Reading English articles or magazines
- Joining a language course or tuition for a basic and a proper learning
- Imitating your Favourite celebrity's speeches

The main thing the students should keep in mind their teachers should be more knowledgeable and experienced because you know there is one statement like "a good learner can be a good teacher". So for being a good teacher first be a good learner.

Firstly, teachers are expected to know how to use different methods to explain any topics because every student or learner like paying attention to clear and understandable lessons. For being such kind a teacher they have to bear in mind these tips:

- Scheduled lesson
- Communicating friendly
- Giving motivation
- Making entertaining games and activities
- A focus on social justice
- Patience and humility

Scheduled lesson

Before starting lesson teachers always should have a lesson plan that means they prepared very well for the lesson they are going to explore. Being a well-organized teacher gives a stimulation to students in order to learn that subject diligently. While explaining the lesson, they can draw students' attentions easily by help of ready materials.

Communicating friendly

Greet your students with enthusiasm every day. Find as many positive statements as possible or as time permits. Allow time for students to share stories, events, or things with you. Even if you schedule a specific time slot each day for 3-5 students to share, it's friendly, warm, and welcoming. helps to create an environment. This shows that you care and provides opportunities for each of your students to learn about things that are important to them.

Take time to share what is important to you from time to time. It could be that your child took their first steps or you saw a great game that you want to share with your students. Your students will see you as a genuine and caring person. This type of exchange should be done periodically, not every day.

Giving motivation

Provide new and interesting reading material to make educational materials new and interesting for the interest of students it would be appropriate to use textbooks, study guides, and applications. This content and content that make the materials easy and interesting for students to learn It is more common in primary classes, where it is easy to understand and master illustrated textbooks help to develop the child's interest more. To create a positive learning environment, to make students interested in learning and It is very important to create a positive learning environment.

Making entertaining games and activities

According to a study conducted by researchers at the University of Wisconsin, interesting games at school definitely increase the attention of students. It's not hard to see if your students are interested in playing games in the classroom, because fun classroom games are often high-spirited and require a lot of concentration to win. More than ten times, students often look forward to a lesson or class if it includes an interesting game. And if they feel motivated, they can overcome even the most difficult learning obstacles.

The first way to promote social justice in the classroom is to create a community of conscience. This environment ensures that students' voices, opinions and ideas are valued and respected by their instructor and peers. Teachers can establish a community of conscience by creating rules that teach fairness in classroom discussions and behavior.

A focus on social justice

Productive conversations can be created by teaching students to share their ideas and respond to the ideas of others in a way that allows for disagreement but still values the student's perspective. Teachers can model questions and answers that illustrate ways to thoughtful conversation rather than making students feel bad or devalued by their classmates. By providing model responses, teachers can illustrate to students how a good response helps to enrich a conversation whereas some responses can shut discussions down. Deally, students should view each other as academic siblings or co-learners instead of competitors. This perspective allows students to understand that while disagreements may occur, they must work together to increase their knowledge.

Patience and humility

It is very difficult to educate people, to teach them new things, because it requires perseverance and spiritual breadth, which allows you to see the individuality in a person and reveal his talent, about which the person himself can guess can't. In general, this great profession represents nobility and humanity. That's what a teacher should be, because a selfish, cruel and domineering nature can never make a good teacher. In the definition of "teacher", everyone puts something unique, starting from his own experience, because for someone it is a teacher and an educator, but for someone it is a tyrant and a tyrant. People who undertake the duty of teaching must meet the requirements of this profession, be humane, honest, open and work tirelessly on their inner self-improvement.

Conclusion

Teachers should be so attentive when they are giving a lecture or explaining a theme because every little mistake can cause to distract students' attention as a consequence, students may feel unsatisfied understanding the topic.
